A book full of family life

Delhi's suddenly soaring temperatures seem to have little or no effect on the city's literary creativity, for book launches are still happening by the dozen. The latest was a book by Gitanjali Prasad. The Governor of Jammu and Kashmir, Lt. General (retired) SK Sinha came all the way to release the book.

The formalities of the release was followed by a discussion of four panelists Arun Maira, chairman of Boston Consulting Group, Justice Leila Seth, author Geetanjali Prasad and publisher Urvashi Butalia. Each one spoke of what they thought about the book. And also about the relevance of the subject—family life—in today's world. Obviously, it was a topic that interested all those assembled, for one could see them all listening intently.

Rod Pryde, the British Council director was there with his wife Susanne and both of them later said that they had a lovely time listening to the panel.

Once the discussions were over, Arun Maira made a passing comment. "I would call my wife a family-maker not just a home-maker," he said much to the surprise of all present. And a further, off-the-cuff discussion ensued.
